In case you're new at the genre, we've covered a similar game in the past (one that's super popular among the gaming community) - League of Legends: Wild Rift. So if you know the title already, or have an idea what it is about, then you'll have no issues adapting to Arena of Valor. AoV is also a MOBA, and the playstyle is fairly similar to Wild Rift.

Focus on learning just a few heroes

If you want to have a much easier time winning more games, then I strongly suggest you stick to just a few heroes, instead of trying to be a jack of all trades, master of none. This is one of the best things you could do, especially when you're just starting out in the game. When you're focused on just a handful of heroes, you will learn all of their match-ups, strengths, weaknesses, as well as what items are best depending on the situation.

Make sure that you also stick to one or a maximum of two roles, because every role has its own playstyle - some have to be aggressive, others have to be supporting, and so on.

Always make the objectives your main priority

The game's objectives should always be a top priority of yours - not kills, not fights, and definitely not chasing other heroes. Only objectives!

That is the best piece of advice that I've ever received, and so I'm passing it on to you. When you focus on the objectives, be it enemy towers, enemy Core, or important Jungle objectives(Abyssal Dragon or Dark Slayer), you should always think about the best approach.

When you focus on these objectives, most of the time you will win the game - and I'm saying 'most of the time' because I know very well that some games are simply un-winnable!

Play according to your power spike

No matter if you are ahead or behind in terms of items and power, you can always do something about it. I suggest that you have patience and farm as much as you can, try to buy the items you need to make your hero strong and try not to have isolated deaths to enemy heroes.

When you know that your character has reached a certain power spike (let's say 2 items) you could look to challenge other enemy heroes. Also, make sure that you always check the scoreboard - that way you'll know exactly what builds the enemies are going for and how you can adapt your itemization.
